Munsey's Magazine is one of the best monthlies published and sold at ten cents a copy, or $1.00 a year. Two years ago this month sixty thousand copies of the Munsey were issued and now it has reached the magnificent figures of five hundred thousand copies a month. Frank A. Munsey deserves great credit for making it possible for the people to get such an excellent magazine for ten cents a copy.

An exchange says that a humble boy with a shining pall went singing gaily down the vale to where a cow with a brindle tail on the alfalfa did regale. A bumble bee did gaily sail over the soft shady vale, to where the boy with a shining pall, was milking the cow with the brindle tail. The bee lit on the cow's left ear, her feet flew up through the atmosphere, and through the leaves of a cottonwood tree, the boy soared into eternity.

The statement of the business of all lines of the Pennsylvania railroad company for September was issued Oct. 30th. All lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie as compared with the same month in 1894 show: An increase in gross earnings of $288,456; an increase in expenses of $268,262; net earnings of $20,194. The nine months of 1895 as compared with the same period of 1894, show: An increase in gross earnings of $4,602,031; an increase in expenses of $3,575,087; an increase in net earnings of $1,026,944.

A hundred years ago the post office carried only 2,000 pieces of mail a day. Now there are more than 9,000 letters and packages dropped into the mails every minute. In 1802 there were handled 15,000,000,000 pieces. The registry letter system has been vastly developed, so that only one letter in every 15,000 pieces of matter ever goes astray and becomes lost. As far back as three years ago it was estimated that the letter carriers of Uncle Sam delivered in a year 5,500,000 registered letters, 1,355,000,000 other letters, 275,000,000 postal cards, and 600,000,000 newspapers, besides collecting 300,000,000 local letters, 750,000,000 mail letters, 115,000,000 local 150,000,000 postal cards, and 200,000,000 newspapers.

The Raftsmen's Journal of Clearfield, in speaking of the eighth commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," says: "Less than fifty per cent of the population are constitutionally honest. The commandment is broken by people who want to have some standing in society. An honest man is a rare thing in this day. Some have been tested and found pure as gold, while others have been tried and found that all they desire is to escape the eye of human, to say nothing of the eye of God. A very pious man of this place was put to a test recently. A purse, seemingly well filled, was placed upon the street he was known to travel. He came along, discovered it, picked it up, and then cast around to see if any person was watching. Seeing no one, he hastily pushed it in his pocket, repaired to a secluded place, examined the contents and finding nothing of value stealthily returned and laid it where he found it. What would he have done if that pocketbook had contained $1,000? The man who does not steal because he is afraid of public criticism is a thief at heart, and the country is full of just such people."

There are many things in and about Reynoldsville that we could mention to recommend the town to the outside world, but there is one thing that would not be out of place to mention at the present time and that is our excellent water works. While the little streams have gone dry and the rivers become impure that supplied other towns of this state with water, the people of Reynoldsville have had an abundance of pure sparkling water that bubbles up from a half dozen or more springs on the hillsides east of town, flows into the dam and is pumped into the reservoir. There has been much suffering in various places among the people and animals from the drought, but the people of our town have not lacked for water. Thanksgiving day draweth nigh and while the devout people of this place assemble in their various places of worship they should not forget to return thanks to the "Giver of all good and perfect gifts" for the fountains of water that did not run dry while a water famine existed in various parts of the state. Good water works is one of the best of recommendations for a town when industries are looking for locations. The water system of this town has been tested again and again and so far it has always been sufficient to supply the needs of our people.

LETTER FROM KANSAS.

A GROCERYMAN OF REYNOLDSVILLE DESCRIBES THE STATE.

A Good State for Girls—Poor Place for Bachelors.

HARLISON, KAN., Oct. 29, 1905.

EDITOR STAR:—Perhaps no country on the American continent has been so thoroughly boomed as the territory known as Southern Kansas. Nor is there a country from the borders of Austria to the vine clad shores of California whose natural resources will admit of more booming than this. The first impression one gets of this country after a tiresome journey of fifteen hundred miles is by no means pleasant. You are greeted by a broad, flat prairie hundreds of miles in extent at every point of the compass, with nothing but blue sky above and prairie grass as far as the eye can carry, which is often thirty or forty miles. Without the slightest variation in the scenery a person is liable to be stered with the "Jim Jams" or, in other words, a weird, lonesome feeling very forcibly presses itself upon you. So great is the monotony at first that one readily imagines that the line of ghosts which Macbeth saw or even the Jackson street monster would be a relief to the tired vision. This, however, soon wears off. The first inhabitants of this country, although hardly necessary to state, were the buffalo and the red man. I mention the buffalo as an inhabitant in connection with the Indian, though not intentionally doing him—the buffalo—any injustice, for in comparison he is by far the superior, and as long as the plains are inhabited his memory will be kept sacred by the ever present and indelible buffalo wallow, a shallow pool, made by tramping and wallowing. Buffalo were said to be plentiful on these prairies fifty or sixty years ago as the stars in the milkyway. Plenty of men, with a tinge of romance in their makeup and as is suspected only a slight tinge of truth, are willing to testify that their fathers saw herds of them that took hours for them to pass and that greatly resembled a moving plain. For miles and miles nothing but a moving, surging mass could be seen. The events which form the basis for these highly colored stories, like the earliest Greek history, is seen only through the curtain of tradition. We are certain that the buffalo existed here in large numbers and amid these myths and traditions facts grew rapidly into fables. Kansas people never hesitate to tell a good story. The buffalo and Indian finally gave way to the cattle, horse, cowboy and Texas steers. This is the burly, brusky cowboy of fifteen years ago who is so thoroughly advertised all over the known world, the hero of every school boy and the terror of the plains, not the quiet, mild fellow that now looks after "cows."

The above triflingly treated finally retreated southward before successive waves of immigration and thus the most formidable and threatening barrier to civilization was removed. We have before us to-day the Kansas stranger in all his varied experiences, at times on the top crest of prosperity, only to be precipitated to grovel in the depths of adversity. Farming in Kansas until the present, especially for the last four years, has been both successful and unsuccessful. Successful because the Kansas farmer is of a peculiar makeup; not in Africa's dark forests or burning deserts, nor in the land where the crescent towers above the cross can such energy be found as in these gritty, sandy soils of toll. Unsuccessful on account of hot winds burning up crops. Notwithstanding all these failures the Kansas farmer is by no means discouraged. They are as hard to discourage and as truly heroic as were the Spartan soldiers at Thermopylae. Ingalls says Kansas can promise more in June and pay less in September and promise less in September and pay more in June than any state in the Union, due to the hot winds burning up crops in July and August and a heavy wheat crop the following summer. These, after an undue amount of experimenting have found the crops most suitable for this locality. The wheat crop this year was a failure, oats only fair. Corn is a good crop and is now being husked—"shucked" is the western term. Most of it is being cribbed as it only brings twelve cents a bushel of 56 pounds, shelled. Kaffir corn, one of the greatest feed crops that was ever grown, is everywhere abundant, stock men claiming to be superior to any other grain for feeding cattle and hogs. This, above all other cereals, seems to be especially adapted to the Kansas climate, as it is not injured by dry weather. Two crops can be raised in a single season from one planting. When wheat raising was the rage the country was stripped of nearly all the hogs and cattle. Every energy was turned to raising wheat. The wheat belt seems to have changed and again the country is filled with cattle and hogs. It is conceded by all that this is one of the best stock countries between the Rockies and the Atlantic. Winters are mild and short, resulting far less feed than in eastern and northern states. The financial troubles of the last two years, coupled with the poor wheat crops and low prices have had a very depressing effect, but now they seem to have a turn in the road and are in a fair way to make money, and when we consider the condition of some of the older states we are forced to the conclusion that there are many advantages in Kansas for farmers that older states can not offer.

Morally speaking, Kansas is up with any other place in the world, and in an educational sense she is foremost in the rank. About the first thing a bachelor notices is that there is a plentiful scarcity of girls, in the ratio of about six men to one woman, and if the "Hopeless Dozen" were here their case might indeed be hopeless. Doc Harbison, with all his facial beauty and manly bearing, might succeed by going south among the squaws. If I were a young woman with marriageable tendencies I would come to Kansas, and if I were a bachelor I would do just as I am going to do—go back to Western Penna and trust the rest to luck.

People seem to be as rigid here in clinging to fashions as they are in the east. Shoes are just as pointed, hats with the same misplaced-flower-garden appearance, moustache sleeves and the whole carterium just as exacting. The warm climate seems to have a collapsing effect on the sleeves and one would suppose a bicycle pump to inflate them would give them their normal as well as ridiculous appearance. The people in the towns and cities are of a migratory disposition and are of the opinion that they are needed in the east. The political pot here is beginning to simmer in a lively way. The populists seem to have it pretty much their own way. Every populist is not only an orator but a financier; though his wife may make the living by washing, yet this does not conflict with his opinions so ably set forth from the dry goods box which he holds down. The clear and brilliant atmosphere of Kansas gives to its Italian skies a richness which has always been the admiration of travelers and baffling the ability of even an Angelo or a Raphael to paint them. A Kansas sunset is simply magnificent in the extreme. Sunset Cox, with his powers of description, would fall to draw a fair picture.

Should this be fortunate enough to escape the waste basket I will write you next week of my experience and observations among the Indians. Yours,
GEORGE H. MURPHY.

The Power of a Newspaper.

Those who show a newspaper man a kindness never make a better investment, or one that will pay them in larger returns. There are times in the life of every man, may he be in either private or political life, when a newspaper can either make or break his future prosperity. Newspaper men like others, are only human. They favor those who favor them and unmake them who do them a wrong. Men too often, in the vain imagination of their own conceit, undervalue the true power of the press. No matter how powerful a man may be, the persistent effort of the press will kill his strength despite the best effort he may otherwise put forth.—Exchange.
